Introduction

Our examiners' reports are produced to offer constructive feedback on candidates' performance in the examinations. They provide useful guidance for future candidates. The reports will include a general commentary on candidates' performance, identify technical aspects examined in the questions and highlight good performance and where performance could be improved. The reports will also explain aspects which caused difficulty and why the difficulties arose, whether through a lack of knowledge, poor examination technique, or any other identifiable and explainable reason.

Where overall performance on a question/question part was considered good, with no particular areas to highlight, these questions have not been included in the report. A full copy of the question paper can be downloaded from OCR.

Paper Y107/01 series overview

Y107 is one of thirteen units for the revised A Level examination for GCE History. This unit tests an extended period of History of about fifty years through an Enquiry or source-based option and an essay. The paper is divided into two sections. In Section A candidates have to answer a compulsory source questions based on four written primary sources. The question requires them to use all four sources to assess the validity of a view. In Section B candidates are required to answer one essay question from a choice of two.

To do well on Section A, candidates need to be able to consider both provenance of the sources and apply contextual knowledge to them in order to reach a judgement about the sources in relation to the issue in the question.

To do well on Section B, candidates need to address the issue in the question, using detailed supporting knowledge. In order to reach the higher levels candidates will need to assess the issues they discuss and reach a supported judgement at least in the conclusion.

Overview of candidate performance

Candidates who did well on this paper generally did the following:

- considered the provenance of the source(s) and used relevant contextual knowledge
- linked the contextual knowledge clearly to the source being discussed to show whether the view of the source was valid or not
- reached an overall judgement as to the extent to which the sources supported the view in the question
- in answering the essay question, discussed at least two issues in depth
- gave supporting detail that was both accurate and relevant to the question set, not just the topic
- reached a supported judgement about the issue in the question
- made a series of interim judgements about the issues discussed in relation to the question.

Candidates who did less well on this paper generally did the following:

- did not consider both the provenance and use contextual knowledge to evaluate the sources
- wrote an unbalanced answer in their treatment of the sources, with very little consideration of one of the sources
- reached a judgement based on their knowledge rather than the sources
- showed a poor understanding of the major issues relevant to the essay
- were unable to support their answer with relevant material
- did not focus on the precise wording of the question
- made unsupported comments about issues which were assertions.

Section A overview

Section A is the source element of this paper and the A Level examination, testing AO2. It is therefore important that responses are driven by the sources as this is the only part of the examination where this is tested. There is one compulsory question in this section. The question requires candidates to use all four sources to assess how far they support a view. Candidates are advised to spend slightly longer on Section A as it carries more marks than Section B. Centres should be aware that in answering the question there is no requirement for candidates to group the sources and that any level or mark can be achieved without this. However, candidates do need to consider all four sources and in order to reach the higher levels should assess the provenance of each source and test the validity of the source using contextual knowledge. In order to reach the highest levels there should be clear evidence of a judgement about the sources, based on an assessment of their provenance and the use of contextual knowledge, and the extent to which they support the view.

Question 1

1 Using these four sources in their historical context, assess how far they support the view that Mary Tudor's restoration of Catholicism was popular. [30]

There was a good range of answers to the source question. Most candidates displayed a sound understanding of most of the sources in relation to the actual question set and were able to link the information in the source to the question. This was particularly true of Sources A, B and C. Source D was more challenging for the lower ability answers as they were uncertain as to whether it showed support or opposition to the restoration of Catholicism. Source A was seen clearly to offer support for the proposition and nearly all candidates were able to select relevant material from the source to support the view. Similarly, most were able to select material from Source B and use it to explain that the restoration was not popular. Most also identified the more balanced nature of Source C with evidence both for and against the proposition. However, Source D presented the greatest difficulty. Many weaker answers simply stated that it showed there was no support as things were depressed and ruined, with people broken in spirit. However, stronger answers debated whether this showed that people did support the restoration as Protestantism was destroyed or whether because they were broken they accepted Catholicism only because it was enforced and therefore not really popular.

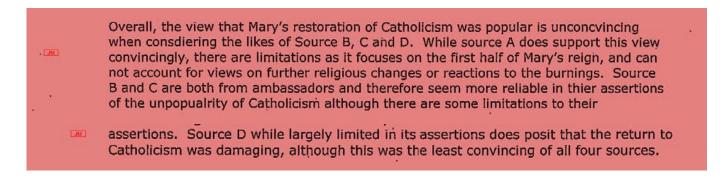

There was little difficultly for most to apply contextual knowledge to at least some of the sources. However, what was particularly noticeable was that the evaluation became less strong the further the answer progressed. It was particularly noticeable that there was little use of contextual knowledge to discuss Source D, which was often the last source considered. Contextual knowledge was used well to test the view of Parkyn. Many made mention of the joyous welcome given to Mary or mass being said in various parishes before laws had been repealed. In discussing B many answers did challenge the view using the fact that there is little evidence of people being converted or that there were no revolts other than Wyatts, which most suggested was not about religion. Some very strong answers were aware of the moving of the burnings because of fear of unrest or the profits to be made by Kent cherry sellers and used that to test the validity of the view. In discussing Source C a few strong answers challenged the comment about the building of monasteries, either noting very few were refounded or pointing to the difficulty in getting acts passed until there were guarantees about monastic lands. However, Source D was done less well with very few aware of Mary's appointments at Oxford. Discussion of provenance varied considerably. There were some simplistic comments, such as they were written at time or were eye-witnesses and are therefore reliable. Such comments would not score well at GCSE and did not score well at A Level. Whilst many commented on the reliability of the authors because of their position and beliefs, the strongest answers often looked at the dates of the sources and the geography of where they were from. Source A was written at the very start of Mary's reign and therefore did not cover the period of the persecutions, whilst also noting it was from Yorkshire, a traditionally Catholic area. Similarly, comments about B and C being from the period of the persecutions was noted and that they offered a London view. The strongest answers often picked up on Renard's relationship with Mary and the factional struggle at court with Gardiner urging restraint. However, there were some who were confused by C and seemed to think that the Papacy was based in Venice or that Venice was Protestant. With Source D most focused on the Protestant nature of the writer, but stronger answers did comment on the date and Jewel's absence from England during Mary's reign.

However, it was a trend that many responses dealt with one element of the contextual knowledge or provenance well, but not the other and this limited the mark credited. Similarly, despite often good contextual knowledge and provenance there was no attempt to judge the overall validity of the source in relation to the popularity of the restoration and this also limited the response. However, Exemplar 1 below provides a good example where all three elements are considered and therefore Level 6 is reached.

Exemplar 1

of m er ez 000 17 th of 000 ch re bu re m W SC con	Allowed suit in. This confirms the voluntary aspect of religious change at the beginning Mary's reign and the argument that 'all without compulsion of any act or law, but herely on wish of Queen Mary' is supported by the crouds who greeted Mary as she intered London on the 3 rd August. The lack of compulsion her subjects faced in this arly part of her reign is further supported by her speech to citizens of London on the 7 th August 1553 which stated that she hoped others would follow her religion but that his would not be forced. This suggests that there is considerable reliability in the source and in taking the form of a book detailing religious change, would have had the purpose f creating an accurate historical account. However, Parkyn's book only details religious hanges up to 1554 which means that the source is largely limited to the first few eligious changes taking place, and more importantly, is not able to mention the urnings that took place from February 1555 which challenge the view that Mary's estoration of catholicism was popular. Further, Parkyn was a Catholic, meaning that h hay have overestimated the support for Mary, this is evident in his omission of the (yatt's rebellion of January 1554, which may have had religious motivations. While this bource is useful in understanding the initial support for the restoration, it is unable to forment on the latter half of Mary's restoration, meaning that the source is incomplete is supporting the view.
INT AT St St T St St St St St St St St St St St St St	ource B challenges the view that the restoration of Catholicism was popular, instead rguing it was 'cruel enforcement'. This is perhaps evident in the 280 burned at the take for their protestantism and heresy that shows the extent the religion was forced on he people of England. Since it is written the day aftr John Rogers, the biblical translator as burnt, it could be argued that the reaction has been dramatised, becuase it was the rst burning to take place in Mary's reign. Because of this, it is also unable to comment in the later burnings of notable persons such as Cranmer, Latimer and Ridley which ponfirms that the comments that the source can make on the popualrity of the estoration of Catholicism was limited. The argument that 'onlookers wept, others rayed to God' is supported by sources of Gardiner who feared that the burning of rotestants furthered their cause as it showed the extent of their belief. This further hallenges the view that the restoration to Catholicism was popular which is aided or the 'not convert back to Protestantism' suggesting that the majority of the abjects were dedicated to the Protestant cause. This view is supported by the riots that took place during the intial burnings of 1555 which suggest that they were not supported, although it must be remembered that these were minor and that many areas turned up to the burnings as a form of entertainment. As the Imperial ambassador Renard would have been tasked to record an accurate account of the reaction the P burnings. This source is further reliable given that Renard had a close relationship with Mary, advising her often, meaning that his production of an unfavourable account of the restoration of Catholicism would not necessarily be expected. This makes the source JU more reliable in documenting the level of popularity that the restoration of Catholicism had recieved. Source C makes further claims that the view the restoration of Catholicism was unpopular in the argument that 'most pretend to reject protestantism and on first oppurtunity would return to it'. This is evident in the arrest and burning of Cranmer in KU I which he recanted and swore to be Catholic. At his burning on the 21st March 1556 Cranmer was able to recant this and reclaim his dedication to the Protestant faith, evidence that Catholicism was not popular among the people confirming restoration wsa not popular. The knowledge that 'in order not to be decieved, ordered that Cardinal Pole E-P-1 should have everything referred to him' suggests an intimate knowledge of ongoings of court confirming the reliability of the letter. Unlike sources A and B, Michiel has been ableto experience much of the religious changes that took place as well as the majority of the burnings which does suggest that the source is useful in looking at the reaction to the restoration of Catholicism as a whole. As this letter is unlikely to ever be read by those in England, it is likely that Machiel was able to argue his true opinions on the restoration which does add a further air of reliability. The further view that 'conspiracies and plots are formed against her daily' seems to be dubious given that the only TRUT prominent rebellion in Mary's reign was Wyatt's rebellion of 1554. This limits the reliability of the source as it seems to make reference to small scale grievences and emphasis their role too much. The reliability of Source C is further limited in its claim [KU] that 'Monasteries are being built, churches are full' as although the commission set up in January 1555 to refound some religious houses and monasteries had begun work in 1557, the number of houses that were built and refounded was very limited. Although Michiel may have aimed to write a matter of fact account as to the religious developments taking place at court, the views offered are hrd to confirm with available evidence meaning that there is some limit to the reliability of the source. Source D further challenges the view that the Catholic restoration under Mary was popular. Written in 1559, the writer is able to write his true feelings on the resoration 1.00 given Mary's death was 17th November 1558. Source D argues that Mary's restoration of Catholicism caused 'desolation' of universities and this can perhaps be credited with KU Pole's appointment as Chancellor of Cambride University, which provided a strong link between education and the church. There is further support of this argument in the KU I effects of the War of Words which included censorship laws that stopped free discussion of religion meaning that the Source is convincing in asserting 'scarcely two indivduals who think with us'. This confirms that the resotarion to Catholicism was not popular as it prevented discussion of religion and expression. However, there is perhaps some limit KUI to the argument that 'desolation could be effected in such a short time' given that 19,000 copies of the Second Book of Common Prayer were smuggled into England during the reign of Mary I, and considering that the impact of the War on Words is difficult to determine. As a Protestant, it can be argued that although haveing witnessed the reign of Mary, Jewel makes unfavourable conclusions that have been dramatised and are not Pal in line with beliefs of the majority. This is evident in its failure to mention the role of Pole in education and his 'Top-down strategy' which led to more education of clergymen as well as new religious texts which did create room for discussion which may have increased the popularity of the restoration of Catholicism. Further, as Jewel was in exile EP 1 during Mary's reign it can be argued that there is further limitation in his account, as he fails to be in a position of secure knowledge of the events on England. As it is likely that he may have left England in the protestant exodus of January 1554.

Section B overview

In Section B candidates are required to answer one question from a choice of two. Given that most candidates are likely to spend longer on Section A than B it is not expected that they will be able to cover all the issues raised by the question. Candidates can score well by considering two or three issues in depth and reaching a supported judgement. However, it is important to ensure that the issues selected allow a justifiable judgement to be reached. The majority of candidates chose to answer Question 3, but both questions produced a wide range of responses.

Question 2*

2* To what extent did the religious settlement of 1558–1559 achieve Elizabeth's aims? [20]

Although this question was less popular than Question 3, there was still a good range of answers. Candidates adopted a range of approaches to the question and both proved successful provided that they identified Elizabeth's aims and then used their knowledge to address the extent to which she achieved her aims. A number of responses looked at just the short term aims of Elizabeth in terms of achieving religious stability after the reigns of Edward and Mary and the potential threat from overseas. However, there were other responses which looked at settlement in the longer term and considered whether it allowed her aims to be achieved throughout her reign. Either approach was acceptable provided that the argument was linked back to the settlement and was not simply an answer that looked at whether her religious policy was a success.

Lower ability responses showed a very limited knowledge and understanding of the details of the settlement, often failing to go beyond naming the major acts of 1558-9. This often led to a general discussion of whether there was religious stability during her reign. However, stronger answers used knowledge of some of the early struggles she had with the Acts to argue that ultimately she did achieve her aim of conformity amongst the majority of the population. These answers argued that she would never have been able to win over all, but that she was more successful than her predecessors, shown by the lack of religious unrest for much of her reign. Some argued that the absence of religious wars, unlike much of mainland Europe was a clear indication that she had achieved her aims, whilst others noted the permanency of the settlement to show that she had achieved her aims. Responses often mentioned the challenges to the settlement in parliament but noted again her success in defeating them and therefore achieving her goal of providing religious stability. A range of examples from the Vestarian controversy and Cope's Bill and Book were used to support the view that a moderate settlement, which had been her goal, was sustained. Similarly, some used the example of the Armada to show how she had won over most moderate Catholics by her policy.

Some responses considered the threat of foreign intervention in 1558 given Elizabeth's position in the eyes of Catholic powers. Many argued that again the settlement was a success. These answers often used the example of Philip persuading the Pope not to excommunicate her as sign of success with the settlement and that it was not until after the rebellion of the Northern Earls that any lead was given to English Catholics by the Papacy. Comments were also made about Elizabeth achieving her own goals by retaining church music and the crucifix in her chapel to assuage foreign visitors.

Exemplar 2 shows a discussion of range of issues but where further development of judgement is needed to reach the very top level.

Question 3*

3* 'Elizabeth's power was seriously threatened in the period from 1588 to 1603.' How far do you agree?

Most candidates were able to discuss a good range of issues and use their knowledge of events such as the Armada and Ireland to address the question of Elizabeth's power. There was a wide range of issues that candidates could discuss, including Ireland, Spain, Essex, social issues, finance and the royal prerogative but it was not expected that to reach even the top level all of these would be considered. What mattered was the quality of analysis and judgement. Even at the lower ability range candidates were usually able to write about what happened in Ireland or with the Armada and provide some explanation as to whether they threatened her power. However, there were a few answers that did not read the question carefully and wrote about events from before 1588 without making their comments relevant to the actual question set. This was particularly the case with responses which spent a great deal of time discussing Mary Queen of Scots.

Most responses considered the Armada and Tyrone's rebellion, usually seeing one of those as the greatest threat. The strongest response discussed each issue and reached a judgement about the issue rather than explaining why each issue was and then why it was not a threat. This latter approach makes interim judgements that much more difficult. There were some very encouraging balanced discussions of these two events which considered how great the military threat was of the Armada and whether an Irish rebellion, despite lasting so long was a threat to her power. Very strong responses contrasted Tyrone with Essex and discussed whether a rebellion in London was a greater threat to Elizabeth's power than one in Ireland.

Discussions about developments in parliament were handled well by the higher ability responses. Lower ability responses were often confused over what monopolies were and their significance. There were also number who did not pick up on the Golden speech and use that to show how, despite the battles of previous years, Elizabeth was still able to control MPs. There were some strong answers that noted the changing composition of both her Privy Council and parliament and argued that this was a threat to her power, given the new type of Oxbridge educated MP. However, some did balance this against her general ability obtain subsidies and her prerogative powers of summoning, proroguing and dissolving parliament.

Some of the most interesting discussion was found when answers considered her image and age and the extent to which this threatened her power. In particular, some did pick up on negotiations with James, suggesting that even if outwardly loyal some were already preparing for a future without her.

There were many very good answers, as can be seen in Exemplar 3, which weighed up a range of issues to reach a balanced conclusion. However, most were able to explain some issues even if the answer was just a list of challenges.

Review of results

If any of your students' results are not as expected, you may wish to consider one of our review of results services. For full information about the options available visit the OCR website. If university places are at stake you may wish to consider priority service 2 reviews of marking which have an earlier deadline to ensure your reviews are processed in time for university applications.

activeresults

Active Results offers a unique perspective on results data and greater opportunities to understand students' performance.

It allows you to:

- Review reports on the performance of individual candidates, cohorts of students and whole centres
- Analyse results at question and/or topic level
- Compare your centre with OCR national averages or similar OCR centres.
- Identify areas of the curriculum where students excel or struggle and help pinpoint strengths and weaknesses of students and teaching departments.
